FEATURES OF PSYCHOLOGICAL AND PEDAGOGICAL TRAINING FOR INDIVIDUAL TACTICAL AND SPECIAL EVENTS CONDUCTED BY THE NATIONAL POLICE OF UKRAINE

The article discusses the features of psychological and pedagogical training for individual tactical and special events conducted by the National Police of Ukraine. It has been found that awareness of the content of their activities in specific situations will allow the head of a police body or unit to identify, evaluate and envisage a number of opportunities that will positively influence their result, as well as how to weaken the influence of negative, physical and psycho-traumatic factors while performing professional duties.

Also, a significant role in the organization and training of personnel plays an imitation of different situations of operational-service activities. There is a rule: if the more similar and realistic training – than more effective and successful the result of the performance of the duties of the service. In addition, during practical training, the personnel should familiarize themselves and, if possible, feel the majority of the range of influences that are characteristic of a particular situation.

Due to the long-term danger or threat, partial or complete restriction and intense waiting, among personnel may gradually increase and increase other negative conditions: worry, fear, affect, frustration, panic, indifference, loss of sense of danger. That is why the psychological-pedagogical support for the provision of police tactical actions and special measures should have concrete, clearly defined tasks, forms, methods and means of influence on personnel in order to overcome the above and other negative conditions, both on their own and with the participation of the relevant specialists.

One of the most effective means of positive influence on each policeman is the joint conduction of organized encouraging events among the entire staff. This may be, for example, some sort of conversation, meeting, weapon cleaning, radio listening or TV viewing, a comprehensive training session, a positive game-based training on working out a specific element or the task of the operational plan, other various situational trainings, etc.
