LEGAL PROBLEMS OF COUNTERACTION DESTRUCTIVE INFORMATION INFLUENCES IN THE MODERN INFORMATION SPACE

The article explores the modern information space, which is an integral part of everyday life. The life of a modern person is built in such a way, that he is constantly in the information space against his will. Along with this, with its help the modern information society is developing, where information plays a key role. At this stage of development of society, information has expanded its capabilities. From now on it is perceived as a commodity that has its own quotation; the content of something we learn (data, knowledge); modern dynamic phenomenon (communication, influence). Given the role of information, a person uses available sources of information, including the Internet and the media, which have become an integral part of humanity. The user, taking certain steps to search for this or that information, involuntarily falls into the so-called “information bubble”. Being in this bubble, the user mostly pays attention to the information that he likes or agrees with. Thus, the user is not even interested in other approaches to the interpretation of information, limiting their worldview, rights and freedoms, narrowing their environment and sphere of interests. In such circumstances, the user during processing does not pay attention to the positive or destructive content of information. Some problematic issues that arise due to the destructive impact of information are considered. This kind of influence is manipulated by the user, who may perform actions that are not typical for him or reveal “hidden” aspects of the person. In addition, the impact may be a threat of violence. It is determined that each of the users has individual characteristics, as a result of which the influence of different information, including destructive, is different. Therefore, experts emphasize the urgency of carrying out, within the law, measures aimed at overcoming the destructive impact of information. Because such influence contains a violent component against the individual and society in general. It should be noted that even when identifying information with a violent component, it is difficult to find the original source of information or to prosecute the author of the original source or the one who transformed the information from positive to destructive. The fact is that this “source of violence” may be located in another part of the globe, where such submission of information does not contain elements of violation of the law. Therefore, he cannot be prosecuted.
